that the prosecution should urge on the Court the passing of a rigorous sentence. He argued that Justice Bartlett should not be influenced, and that the jury's recommendation to mercy should stand first.

M'KANE HEARING HIS SENTENCE.

The Court also refused a stay of the execution of judgment for twenty days to enable the defendant to move on notice for a certificate of doubt.

Mr. Shep Ird then moved, on the part of the people, for the passing of judgment.

"The prisoner has been in public life for many years," he said. "He is of mature age, and has had large experience in the law, and has also been an administrator of the law. With all his experience he has been adjudged guilty of the crime with which he is charged.

"His insolent disregard of the law and his brutality towards the copyiets sent to get a copy of the registry rolls have all been proven on the trial as well as the periury in the mandamus proceedings."

Although Mr. Shepard did not share the upinion of the jury concerning Mc-kane deserving elemency of the Court in deference to his associates he would say that counsel for the prosecution approved of a substantial consideration by the Court to the recommendation for mercy.

Klefer was a highly respected business man here and had ecumulated a fortune. It now developes that when Kiefer came here twenty years ago he had just eloped with a pretty servant girl in his family, leaving wife and three children in Cincinnati. In some way he compromised his deser tion with her and had lived here with his second wife. They have three children, one a girl of eighteen and two girls under ten years.

On Feb. 10 he told his wife the younger on Feb. 10 he told his wife the younger children ought to have their bangs trimmed, and if she would get them ready he would take them to the barber shop. They never returned, and on the same day Miss Belle Keene, aged twenty-two, the daughter of respected parents, also disappeared. She was a friend of the family, and her relations with Klefer had been particularly friendly. The familles on both sides determined to keep the matter quiet, and employed detectives to trace them.

They have since learned that Klefer, with his children, boarded a train at the Massachusetts avenue station and stopped at Monon, where he was joined by Miss Keene, who went up on the next train, and that together they proceeded to Chicago.
